Our enemy is evil, but they aren't stupid. They know that dropping the price will not make us sell. They're no longer worried about our shares. They're also no longer worried about a wave of FOMO buyers at any price... sort of...

You see, they could have done this massive attack at $50, $100, $200... all throughout the past 18 months. They didn't because there were other options. They are buying time. They used Reverse Repo until the market bottomed on June 17th. Since then, RRP has basically been stuck at $2.2T. Does that mean they are maxed out? Did interest rates rising make RRP costly?

After June 17th, they ran the market up because buying collateral was no longer an option. The S&P; has fallen 400 points and the Dow 3000 since Aug 16th. There is no other choice but to openly short GME to oblivion.

If you have nothing to lose because you are 1000% short, 2000% or 5000% is the same thing.

Every market crash in history has come late September to mid October. 1929, 1987, 2001, 2008. We're down to the short strokes people... I just hope RC and GME people are staying safe, because when this happens... the shit hits the fan.
