As I have an account with Fidelity, I called to find out the number of shares available to short and the borrow rate. Stated I was "doing market research" and was curious about taking a short position on GME (downright lie, this beautiful company is the only stock I hold). Grace told me that she was "sure" there were plenty of shares available to retail to short and it would take 3 min to check... However, I was put on hold for a solid 15 min (included a pic of the time on the phone) and when she came back she said this information was not readily available but if I got a margin account I could get it. She was real nice though in telling me shorting was a bad idea. Just an interesting experience I thought I'd pass off to my friends.
