Hello apes and appettes,

As of Dec 17th up until today, XRT is on the threshold list. <https://www.nyse.com/regulation/threshold-securities> settlement failures may be indicative of naked short selling, although they may also be caused by benign factors, such as administrative errors.

We all know GME is heavily shorted, so the administrative errors do not apply. A clearing broker-dealer must close out a fail to deliver position in a threshold security that has persisted for 13 consecutive trading days. It's already the 20th trading day since XRT was added to the threshold list, and XRT has still not closed out its failure to deliver positions.

Unfortunately, SEC won't do anything. Overstock has been on the Regulation SHO threshold list for 666 consecutive trading days, and the then CEO Patrick Byrne had to issue a crypto dividend to squeeze the shorts.

You can read more about it at this press release at [Overstock.com](<https://overstock.com/>)

"Apparently, the SEC is not serious about enforcing the close out provisions of Regulation SHO or stopping 'market manipulation that is clearly violative of the federal securities laws.'" said Overstock chairman and chief executive officer Patrick Byrne.

The price is not real and SHFs are desperate for investors to sell their shares, so it's being heavily shorted, and they know SEC won't do anything. Fuckery is abound. Buy, Hold, and DRS. Trust the process. GameStop has a lot going on. RC as chairperson. A new team with incredible talent from big companies. NFT marketplace and partnership with LRC, plus a lot more! Don't let the price drop scare you into paperhanding. If anything think of it as a fire sale because it's just a matter of time before this pops off.
