Can anyone here confirm that any stock split via stock dividend in the past for another security was classified differently in their brokerage account? For example, if you owned TSLA back in March 2020 when it issued a stock split via stock dividend, was it classified any differently in your brokerage account than the current GME stock split via stock dividend?

If it looks the same, then we are all freaking out about nothing. However, if the classification is different, then some serious weird stuff is going on.

I am going to call my broker Schwab tomorrow to ask the same thing but thought an ape could answer faster ;)
