

Title: Can't stop...won't stop

Author: StipeK122

Created 2022-03-18 13:21:37 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/th175i/cant_stopwont_stop/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/th175i/cant\_stopwont\_stop/

Unpopular opinion, I came for the squeeze and stay for the losses...my hopes are supporting my trust in RC, but he delivers so I keep trusting him- I am no longer hyped but Zen, and I feel more much wrinkled than before and my diamond hands have given me a unique perspective to react on specific volatility also for other shares I hold.

The dark side won the battle, although they haven't closed...so the war goes dark into guerilla mode.

They have multiple tools to kick the can forever, and we have only shortly seen what they are capable off by turning of the buy button.

Look at Nickel (yes, I am the Nickel/Stainless DD guy ;) ) and get a feeling how much bigger their playing field is...how many more big players+media vs. what?

125k DRS apes and Jon Stewart on Apple TV? so far yes

But wait...if they haven't closed...then they pay every day, right? regardless how small that fee is, they pay it and it keeps increasing with every share they short more to surpress the price I raised when I bought? And in absolute numbers, this fee increases in line with the share price...

2,5% of 200$ are 5$, and so is 5% out of 100$...does the lender want 5$ per share (per year?) regardless the share price?

Haven't they recently just increased the interest rate to 4,4% on stonk-o-tracker? so if the share price increases, and shorts haven't closed, then they will pay this 4,4% also on a price of 150$ and not only on the 88$ they pushed it to...?

So if GME makes a fundamental and slow turn...they have to short more and more, and the lower the price of the share is, the higher will be the interest rate because the lender wants his fixed income not to decrease??

So lending shares may stay at fixed fee, but a substantial price increase will lead to absolutely higher costs?

Is that because they push the price down...to survive as same as all the economies do with their debt in zero interest world?? But inflation forces them to do so now?

RC is the inflation knocking on their doors, making relevant substantial changes and increasing the pressure for GME to become inflationary more expensive for them, cumulative and without the chance to exit the death spiral if I don't sell?

Fuck em, I 'm in...if they cap the price at 69,000$ so like they did with the Nickel and bail them out, reversing trades or introduce daily limits...making standoff agreements or ringfence single shares, all they can do is motivate RC to call the shares back and de-list and then we win again?

And all of this without I mentioned dividends?

Man, what a ride...may the stock market divide the poor from the patient, the return on investment I received is already higher than I ever expected, you can take some of my shares which I did not DRS (yet...I will...I am Europoor and this is really trouble to do that) but not the wrinkles I earned.

You can limit my profits, but this will just fuel my attitude to take these and come after you with the next company you touch...

You have the regulators and the game in your pocket? The apes and I will search your blind spot and hit you even after you have thrown the ball away.

Knowing that RC will not dilute the base we are standing on and is rather working to keep us fed...we should not stop

Can't stop...won't stop