I believe that the more individuals complain the more they will have to forced into acting (I know, I know, but the more paper trail there is the more they need to act). IMO these governing bodies are defrauding the american people, invested in American companies, and even those who are NOT invested due to the constant printing of money. I see individuals complain on here, but if you haven't complained to the governing bodies. it won't be counted. What I think might be a good idea.

1) Is there an expertly written complaint that clearly references DD about suspected market manipulation related to GME

2) Complain to the SEC, but also perhaps an individual can create a SEC complaint BOT to keep track. (and or other relevant bodies)

3) Write letters to congress, but again have a Letters To Congress BOT.

4) Keep a library of formal complaints like the DD library.

5) Is there a complaint guide for International investors to a) complain to USA governing bodies and or B) complain to their own countries governing bodies who operate with the relevant USA governing bodies.
