Gamestop Chairman Ryan Cohen, who is a top 10 Shareholder of Apple Inc, who has been silent, even now after the latest tweets about short sellers, could have had some input in regards to Jon Stewart getting airtime via Apple TV.

Yes, the tinfoil may be touching some loose wires here making me see sparks of creativity but go with it for a moment...

Ryan Cohen can't and really shouldn't talk openly about what all investors since DFV and the other few legends who don't share the same limelight back in 2019, know about by now.

He shouldn't because it's a way to fuck everything up through the corrupt legal system. It could jeopardise the company and his reputation and will likely affect the lives of many, the staff their families aswell as the Apes.

However he has been trying to communicate. Those tweets he's released over the last 12 months are similar in style to DFV's post-congressional theatrics.

What if... And no this isn't a Marvel series episode here... What if Chairman Cohen, having struck a deal with Apple already through Gamestop has had some input into getting Jon Stewart some airtime via Apple TV?

Let Jon tell the Apes instead of risking the above mentioned consequences if RC did it direct himself.

Obviously Jon didn't talk about DRS in full detail or even tried to push that topic but to be fair, his great episode was aimed and non-apes. He's educated those who were oblivious and gave them some wrinkles. Enough to even spur them to dig further. Not everyone will, lot of lazy Apes out there! (All People Equal - only when sharing the same brainwave).

But that aside, Jon did a great job, Dave Lauer was charismatic and fluent in his chat with Jon. Everything just worked better than any retarded Ape here could dream of.

And now that info is out there, accessible to all Apple TV customers.

Is it that much of a stretch to dream or wonder that maybe, just, What If, RC the Lepricohen on St Patrick's day, had some strings pulled for this to go ahead?

And what would that mean exactly, what am I driving at here?

There's good people out there who aren't tied up in red-tape who can speak for the Apes. Some are more influential than others. I believe as time goes on there will be more notable people speaking up. And I can only assume it's with a little influence from the Chairman himself.

Why?

These GME subs, they're all too divided to be able to focus on the same goal of getting the word out in a professional coherent way that will welcome new investors to the way of the Ape. And thanks to Reddit Admin, we can't even talk about each other openly for fear of breaching Brigading rules.

So yeah, I believe there's non-reddit users and our Chairman, even executive board members, doing what they can to promote what we know, just that be better for a wider audience.

Found the switch, the sparks have stopped, taking the foil off.

Oh shit, my hair!!
