A short exert from the article which really says it all...

First, the economists looked at a statistical model that tracks "exuberance," or when prices increase at an exponential rate that can't be justified by economic fundamentals. When their exuberance measure reaches a 95% threshold, that signals 95% confidence that the market is experiencing "abnormal explosive behavior," they noted.

The current exuberance measure: 115%.

I wonder if the same 2008 greedy financial criminals screwed up again? Hmmmm... such a hard call.

Just wanted to make sure y'all got a bit more spicy news, along with the GME stock spit, before going to bed & counting the ~~hours~~ ~~minutes~~ seconds until the market opens on Friday. ■■

Woo-Hoo... LFG!!!
