The form is simply to give himself the right to sell within 90 days of filing. See wiki)

There is currently no indication that he's disposed of any shares or options yet, so any guesses towards this is just that, a guess. Until future filings come out anyone saying he's sold is either misinformed or actively lying.

A positive interpretation of this is that he's filing early into the upward price movement rather than later, so that the filing can be digested prior to massive volatility coming up. It also gives fellow investors a heads up rather than immediately filing and selling during a massive run up. We'll see what/when/if he ends up taking action in the near future.

A negative interpretation of this is that he's filing to sell in the current price range. I don't see this is likely given the current dynamics at play but it's within the realm of possibility.

Overall Cohen is not directly involved in corporate governance and driving the company's vision. He was the one who got the ball rolling with BBY and I'm happy that he'll be reaping the rewards alongside his fellow investors when the time comes.
