Just came across this post on r/antiwork.

First dismissing it as a Kenny drone (10 yr old account, only post), in the comment section I did find some disturbing stories which got me thinking.

Does GameStop actually provide a living wage for its employees? Or do they just do the bare minimum?

If the latter, I would like to urge RC to do something about this.

Yes, delighting customers and making all cool new technological thingies is a great thing.

But in the end it's actually the employees who are the company. Delighted employees make for delighted customers.

Anybody got a clue as how to find out/address this?
