I know talk of selling GME shares is a big no no. But having DRSED a long time ago, I've received mixed messages on how efficient selling shares could be from ComputerShare. I'd heard it could take days to go through, which if you're trying to make a limit order, can be tricky/impossible with the volatility.

So, I sold a few shares as a test. The limit order sale went through inside of ten minutes. 2 days later the transaction was finished and closed on my CS account. The fees (handling/wire charge) are quite high (25$/35$), so when the time comes to sell, at whatever price you choose to, be prepared for those charges on each transaction.

It was painful to sell anything, honestly. But waiting as long as I have, I wanted to make sure I am prepared when the time comes. I hope the info I've gleaned can be helpful to my fellow apes.
