Hedge funds are the ball and chain dragging GME to the seafloor. Remember... Hedgies have been exploiting an infinite money glitch and to that I say FUCK them! Pay us!

So here's my thought and it all seems to make sense in my smooth brain.

The new A team of executive hires have come from some of the most successful companies in the country. How do you think these guys got paid at their other jobs?

Multi million dollar base salaries, stock options and quarterly bonuses ect. These guys and gals had to give up their high paying cushy executive roles to come work for an "up and coming brick and mortar retailer" that's definitely going out of business tomorrow.

The job offer from Gamestop must have been so enticing that a lot of folks up and left for a once in a lifetime opportunity. And obviously the new A team knows that GME is trashed by greedy suit wearing city slickers every beating day. Yet they still signed those papers to join the battle.

There has to be a plan in place to shake the shorts so that Gamestop could be traded under its fair evaluation. Whether we move to a Blockchain marketplace or get an NFT dividend, there has to be a plan in place to ensure the companies success and your success for believing in them when nobody would.

If I know anything is that our lord and savior Ryan Cohen didn't buy millions of GME shares to lose money. DFV sure didn't get into this play for memes I assure you that.

You didn't invest in this company to lose money. Nobody wants to lose money here and our Gamestop team knows that. I guarantee they sit on Reddit while taking a massive poo. They're listening and there is most definitely a plan to shake shorts.

Leaving shorts unanswered for would only risk your job security and money working at Gamestop. The shorts will fight tooth and nail to drive that price down. We all know it.

Stay zen, buy every dip and Drs. Happy late new year woo
