Fidelity's buy to sell ratio was a good measure of retail sentiment to our beloved stonk. 95% buy to sell was not uncommon. Recently, there has been a shift and other stocks on the list have beaten GME's ratio from time to time.

Don't get me wrong. GME is still higher than most stocks on the list, always. But it's more like 70% than >90%.

This is a huge bullish sign.

And there are 12.7 million reasons for this... As apes have evolved we went from any broker -> fidelity, en masse -> computershare.

New buys are now being made in computershare. True apes buy direct through Computershare now they have their accounts.

Fidelity's decreasing buy to sell ratio points to our evolving behaviour, not our loss of love for the stonk.

We are on the right path. Keep up the pressure. DRS and buy through Computershare. To the moon
