

Title: The Big Lie
Author: disoriented_llama
Created 2021-10-08 01:04:46 UTC
Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/q3n1cy/the_big_lie/
Url: /r/gme_capitalists/comments/pvv591/the_big_lie/

Linked Post Content:

<https://www.cnbc.com/2021/09/24/robinhood-what-executives-said-internally-during-gamestop-short-squeeze.html>

Liquidity issues? Notice that it is much easier to fake a slack history than it is to fake archived audio and video footage.

They are a brokerage, they do not have liquidity issues! Even so, how would they know? Settlement is T+2. Also, how can they predict the markets? If they could say "Yep, we better shut it down cause we can't pay for this" how would they know what is going to happen unless they have it rigged in some way?

The narrative being pushed now about liquidity is BS to cover for their fraud of counterfeiting shares and writing naked calls rather than hedging them so they can make more money. This is explained exactly how they do this here:

Anton Kreil Beautifully Deconstructs the Retail Brokerage Industry - YouTube

They simply sell calls to retail without hedging them so if there is ever spike in price either they manipulate it down to avoid paying (and hence pocket the $$$) or end up getting squeezed (once in a life time).

Vlad is almost surely a shill who was hired to be the face of the operation. Most likely initiated in some way by Citadel (Griffin and S. Cohen are connected to the Robinhood foundation which is a theft as are many other billionaires and millionaires who have been connected to it).

The point here is simple, do not believe the narrative being pushed out. There is a reason they are pushing the liquidity issue and that is to cover up the fraud issue. It is the fraud that will land them in jail, not the liquidity. They want to get people to stop at liquidity rather than understanding what was actually going on.

If it is liquidity then it means fraud since brokers should have zero liquidity issues since they are simply the middle man who gets paid either way. The media should be talking about the fraud side but notice they are not. Remember, many brokers were apart of all this, not just RH.

What happen is that RH and many other brokers have been selling retail bullshit and taking the $$$ for years. One day they get fucked and rather than playing the "game" fairly they shut it down so they don't have to pay up. This way they win no matter what. This is called theft.

TLDR: The thing to take away from all this is: 1. It wasn't liquidity, it was fraud. 2. It wasn't just RH but almost all the brokers (so it is a systemic issue). 3. They are trying to whitewash what really happened by making it seem like it was a "liquidity" issue. While this might be "technically" true it is to hide the fact that they committed massive fraud that led up to the event and on the event and after the event.

They are in damage control mode and trying to minimize the damage and distort what really happened so they can save their asses.