Citadel is buying loads of residential real estate in Houston. I mean A LOT. Not only does this sound like they are moving to assert protection, but it's going to keep the housing market inflated by 1. Reducing affordable inventory 2. Keep new home prices artificially high (home builders are one of the highest shortest ETFs behind XRT)

For anyone who may not know, XRT (retail) is where a lot of "boba fide market making" happens. This is when market makers can operationally short an ETF to parse out shares for liquidity. Our GME lives there.

Just thought everyone should know. Not surprising, but I just can't think any lower of these people.
