1. I bought more GME shares in early July through my broker and kept them there through the record date of 7/21. After seeing the number of shares in my account quadruple the morning after 7/21, I immediately DRS'ed it all. Through u/mtgac's discussion with my broker's representative four days ago (8/1), it has come to light that my broker has incorrectly processed GME's corporate action as a stock split, rather than correctly receiving my dividend shares from Computershare via the DTC. Gamestop has also confirmed that some international apes are "still trying to determine if they have received the proper stock dividend." As a Gamestop investor, I want to confirm with my broker that my recent DRS transaction is in proper order, especially for tax purposes. Although I KNOW that every quadrupled share I DRS'ed and now hold with Computershare is 100% authentic, I would like to inquire with my my broker on how they were able to DRS three additional shares for every one share bought before the record date of 7/21. The additional shares I saw in my account the morning of the quadrupling were essentially made up due to an incorrect "stock split" instead of put there through receipt of dividend shares. I will ask these questions as a matter of curiosity, not hostility. I have a great relationship with my broker as I have never had an issue with the services provided to me and all correspondence with their reps has been 5-stars and second to none.

2. I will continue to BUY (when financially able to), DRS, HODL .

3. My nephew's 11th birthday is coming up. Tomorrow I'm going to ask his mom what he's into (probably Minecraft?) and buy something related to it from Gamestop as a birthday present.

4. I just paid USD$14.99 to become a POWER UP REWARDS™ PRO member. Of all the things I could buy from Gamestop, I chose to pay for a PRO membership so that I can promote good gaming journalism via the Game Informer magazine subscription.

5. In the future, whenever I need to buy electronics, games, or any other type of product / service that Gamestop provides, I will prioritize buying from MY COMPANY.

Game on Anon,
