Why is it, regulations for banks has been discussed since 08, and has had ZERO support...but Crypto gets attention immediately when banks cry foul? We aren't heard. If we lock the float of Gamestop by DRS, the synthetic holders definitely benefit...because they can't legitimately close their positions without the DRS float being liquidated. It's only an opinion, but the DRS share holders stand to make a lot more than anyone could imagine. I personally have chosen this path and don't want to sound biased, so I understand that during the squeeze I'll be unable to sell. If the market does tank, which it will, and they need shares to complete their closure, it seems to me that MM's will offer up their clients shares as to protect "Investors." Illegal? Maybe, but everything points to DRS as a protection source. If you read the fine print, you're entitled to something like a measly 250k as an offer of protection? Again, opinion only....and I'm a freaking nobody ■. Good luck to all! It's showtime.
