Ask yourself...

What percentage of LEGITIMATE members of this sub would even think to go to the GameStop employee sub to cause problems?

If you were a SHF wouldn't want to cause division between investors and employees on the same day that GameStop announces it plans to make some of it's employees investors?

MODS - Why not get a jump on this campaign by coordinating with the MODS of the employee sub as well as the other GME investors subs? Set a honeytrap on each of the subs to attract the bots and shills and, if the user can't show proof that they actually hold GME and are also employed by GameStop, simply ban them from all GME investor subs.

I'd go as far as to say that the MODS on the employee sub should be equally concerned about the reverse that occurs with bots and shills from their sub stirring up division on the GME investor subs.

Sounds like a great way to cull the herd.

stay zen apes!
