After holding for about a year now, I'm getting a new appreciation of this GME war. The manipulation is blatant and obvious, and for the first six months of this battle, I was frustrated by it.

But after the last 6 months of continuous manipulation by the hedgies I've decided to give credit where credit is due.

The hedgies have put up a hell of a fight over the past year. They've used legal and glaringly illegal tactics to suppress the price. I'm guessing they've used tactics that we're not even aware of, yet they refuse to succumb to inevitability.

And to this, I salute their resolve. Anything worth having is worth fighting for.

The hedgies have proven themselves worthy opponents (even though they've fought unfairly).

Ultimately, the apes will come out on top and our victory will feel that much more glorious...And the extra-large tendies will be nice too!
