I'm not a smart person but I'm just throwing this out there to see if someone has more insight than me.

For brokers that are internalizing GME orders aka putting an IOU in your brokerage account and pocketing the money (Thus not actually putting a buy order on the market and thus not affecting the price). Then waiting for you to sell at a loss and pocketing the difference.

Would it not inflict some damage to buy the dip and then wait to DRS once the price rises so that they have to then pay more for a real share to transfer over?

Feel free to correct my thinking where appropriate.

Thanks for everyone's efforts.
