

Title: Is it possible?

Author: Man_of_earth89

Created 2021-05-21 14:54:20 UTC

Permalink: /r/ratioatblessions/comments/nhufbs/is_it_possible/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/ratioatblessions/comments/nhufbs/is_it_possible/

Is_self: True

Body:

Is it possible to continue business as is after the shareholder meeting if the vote exceeds the available applicable votes? Logic tells me no it's not possible to have people voted in if the numbers exceed that of the real available share holder votes....

This must be corrected before the new heads of the company are appointed there new rolls...correct?

I keep relating it back to a federal election, if day there were 37 million people in a country and they had a vote tally of 38 million there would be clear evidence of fraud.... it would have to be redone.... wouldn't it?

In this world a lot goes under the radar, but there are a lot of eyes on this....

Can this actually continue if the vote exceeds the available amount of share holder votes? To add to this would it even matter if institutions voted or not?

Just looking for honest answers no emotions attached, just very curious how deep the f*ckery can go.... ■

■