Instead of raising their sell limit for GME above the so-called 'technical' limit of $214748.36, the rumour is actually true!

Any new sell order placed on ComputerShare investor Center (regardless if via the current or the old interface, reachable via "Request a Certificate", that allowed entering orders above 1 and up to 10 million total value) is going to get cancelled a few hours after entering, when the per share price exceeds $3,500 !

So, to get this straight : ComputerShare, our trusted transfer agent who's been providing the only place where our shares are safe from lending and other potential abuse, is now sticking a knife in our backs by creating a sell wall at a measly $3500 !

Well, if that doesn't create a resolve to never sell until the entire system has failed and all responsible have received their judgement, I don't know anymore.

(Note, that I'm still largely DRS'ed and I'll keep it that way, but boy, do I feel fucked, again.)
