

Title: The Single Biggest Doubt I Have About GME (for real)

Author: jeffvox

Created 2022-01-11 03:43:08 UTC

Permalink: /r/GME/comments/s13af3/the_single_biggest_doubt_i_have_about_gme_for_real/

Url:

https://www.reddit.com/r/GME/comments/s13af3/the\_single\_biggest\_doubt\_i\_have\_about\_gme\_for\_real/

GME HODL'er since February 2021 with a real question. And no, I'm not an effing shill.

If the hedgies own the casino, the game, the dealer, and the rules of the game, why the hell does anybody think they won't simply change the rules?

The idea that we will outsmart a corrupt system, and that said corrupt system will then respond with, "Aw, shucks - you got us good. Here's all our money." seems wildly naive.

And the idea that such a move would destroy confidence in the system isn't plausible either. The market exists for major players. We are dudes showing up with $5, in comparison. They don't care if they lose retail traders.

I want to believe. So, make me believe! Why do point to the system's corrupt nature, but then base all your hopes on that same system playing by the rules?

P.S. In contrast, following a certain politician's trading seems like an outstanding idea because she's friends with the casino owners.