The next earnings report could be the tipping point. How?

I believe that if we see continued growth in the company this would only serve to magnify the impact of the DRS numbers. 5 million shares are already accounted for on the last report and with a small float another 5 million is massive (though I do believe with the amount of purple circle posts and the dataset provided by the bot that we will beat this mark). Once the sentiment changes and GME gets wind in mainstream investor circles there really are not a lot of shares to go around.

There is only one thing hindering big whales in jumping aboard and that is a positive EPS, dividends and a clear turnaround for the company. Though we are able to see the lines forming and are content with holding because of this that is besides the point for big money. They come around when the stock has matured and will see them net YOY profits to their portfolio.

2022 will be the year we hear more from our CEO and possibly see green numbers in the last two quarters.
