Hey guys,

New gme ape here and I bought my first few shares last week. I was looking about going all in on gme with my retirement (nfa) but I wanted to know how you can determine gme's fundamental price since it was previously trading at $16-$20 and doesnt have a lot of history in the hundreds. I got into cornpop based off of what I thought was fundamentally undervalued at $5 and am buying at $20 because I think thats fair market price now from its trading history and such. How can I determine fundamentally undervalued or fair price for gme here? I know both stocks sort of move the same but just want to make sure gme has plenty of upside to go- thanks!
