Imma start off with a disclaimer just to cover my basis. You already know how it is.

Disclaimer

*I am a nobody. I am not an expert in anything. Nothing I say in this post or any subsequent post should be taken as any form of advice, including, but not limited to, financial advice, technical advice, or legal advice.

*The purpose of this post and subsequent posts is to foster discussion, share ideas, educate, and maybe present opinions disguised as unbiased information. Any actions taken by individuals based on my posts, now or in the future, is through the individual's own accord and not because I advocated a call to action.

*For my fellow Apes, at times what I say may come off as FUD or I may sound like a shill, but I assure you that is not my intention. I completely believe in GameStop.

*Last but not least, DFV is not a cat but he is definitely the GOAT.

With that out of the way, let's get it.

The GameStop Saga has approached or will soon approach the one year mark for many of us. I'm sure most of us thought we would be chilling in our mansions enjoying our tendies by now. Yet, here we are a year later, patiently waiting. I know some of us are atleast slightly disappointed. It's okay, you don't have to lie. I know I am. It's okay to be let down a little as long as our convictions in GameStop have not gone down.

And, while our convictions may remain the same, the game certainly has not. You see, in the past year, we may not have gotten the MOASS, but we got time. Time to investigate, time to understand, time to realize what's really at stake here. Giving us that time was their biggest mistake. It has become clear that for many of us, the game doesn't stop when the MOASS starts. We are not leaving until we get rich af AND see systemic change.

How can access to a free market be restricted?

How is blatant fraud and manipulation allowed to continue?

How is the punishment scaled in relation to the crime for large scale financial crime less than that of petty crime?

How come individuals are considered more risky than institutions when institutions are the ones gambling away billions on the daily?

How are some of the best investors of our time public officials?

Why are individual investors not allowed to make their own decisions and are restricted for their own “safety”?

Why is it collusion for individuals to openly talk about their individual choices but institutions are allowed to coordinate amongst themselves?

Why do institutions get a bailout but individuals don't?

Why is it so hard to gain transparency in an “open” market?

Why is there never any sort of accountability from institutions or the government?

I can keep going on. The list of grievances doesn't stop here. Our apathy towards them does though. Just by buying, hodling, and DRSing shares in a company we like, we are giving one of the biggest fuck yous to a system that has enabled the rich to get richer by cheating. Before my words get misinterpreted, let me be clear, this is not a “eat the rich” rant. I believe an individual has the right to accumulate wealth. After all, that is what we are doing here. The reason why I and I'm sure many of you are pissed is because of the unfair advantage that has been created for a select few.

But how do we go up against the smartest, richest, most powerful people in the world who have control over the system? Whether it's for the money, the change, or both. I wish I could definitively tell you, but I can't. What I can do is share some things I think might help. To do so, I will be making posts that provide information, tools, ideas, and things of the sort that hopeful you guys find useful; because it's time for us to level up.

Power to the Players!

Also, I know you apes love cryptic shit and puzzles. So I thought we'd have a little fun.
