Listen up, there's so much negative sentiment over RC -EVERYWHERE- it's ridiculous. Wasabi, Twatter, MSM. All because of the towel stock "dump" - or is it?

I'm sure a few of you remember the days of GME ripping assholes back in Dec 2020/Jan 2021, but I believe we're about to see the exact same thing with towel stock, except now to a much more amplified degree thanks to RegSho. Prime brokers, hedge funds, market makers are stuck in a feedback loop that they can't get out of without your help (paperhanding).

Once a stock makes it on RegSho, ALL OF THE FAILS THAT CAUSED IT TO GET THERE HAVE TO BE CLOSED. But Massive_Nectarine, how are fails closed out? Well thanks for asking. Either you paperhand them back to the brokers/hedgies/market makers at what THEY determine the price to be (exactly what is happening now), or you wait for their forced closure to be enacted. T+13 or T+35.

Don't take my word for it. read the damn rule.

It doesn't say cover. IT SAYS CLOSE.

Ok cool so what the does this mean, and why the should YOU care? Look at the anatomy of quite possibly every other name brand squizzle.

FAILS ARE ONLY CLOSED OUT WHEN YOU SELL THEM BACK.

This was the "nuke" button. To force YOU to close out your position at a price they were willing to pay. Who is they? Whoever holds the fail obligations. Had people diamond handed their shares, how do you think those positions get force closed? SPOILER ALERT: THEY DON'T. The entities with outstanding obligations were able to bring GME off the RegSho threshold list by inciting panic in people who held FTDs.

What do you think is happening literally right now with towel stock? THE EXACT SAME THING. towel stock has a ridiculous amount of FTDs that accumulated over the last run-up that HAVE TO BE CLOSED OUT. If you were a prime broker/hedge fund/market maker, would you want to close as many shares as you sold @ max price?

NO YOU WOULDN'T. You'd want to knock the price down as much as possible, shake as many paperhands loose as you can, so you can cover AS FEW obligations as humanly possible at the lowest price you possibly can.

Kinda hilarious to see this inorganic "doom and gloom" surrounding towel stock right now when Nothing. Has. Changed. It's almost like this negative sentiment is completely manufactured to reduce damage as much as possible before liftoff.

Unless you're a paperhand, you're still holding moon tickets - you just don't know it yet. All the paperhands that dumped at a loss? Those are going to be the ones FOMOing back in ONCE towel stock rips at both forced closure stages of RegSho, which will subsequently bring retail into $GME from being in the same super shorted basket.

Why do you think you see the exact same pattern off every stock that sneezes? If you made it this far in the post and really need me to spell that out to you, read again. It's because of reggie.

What the hell does any of this have to do with $GME?

RC knew/knows he has to fall on the sword for this one. The old guard only has one option to stop their destruction. Go after the person retail investors look up to the most. If towel stonk rips, GME will rip and retail will pile back into both, creating a RegSho feedback mechanism in TWO stocks instead of one.

While y'all are busy wiping your tiny tears with your wives boyfriends underwear, Goldman Sachs is going net long BY FAR in towel stock to ride this gravy train to the top. They know they're fucked.

GameStop is the PINNACLE of a symbiotic relationship between a company, its shareholders, and its customers. In 2020, sentiment was bearish af for GameStop and many people thought it was going under. MSM was pushing that it was going under. Hell, you could probably ask the employees back then and they would have told you that it was going under.

GameStop sneezed, Wall Street crimed, and retail was shit on. GameStop was able to sell shares ATM to raise cash and has built itself into a powerhouse of a company - self-sufficient with no debt, with the most raving investor base and customer base the stock market has quite possibly ever seen.

The same sentiment is being pushed in towel stonk right now. Doom and gloom, going bankrupt, RC dumped, bla bla bla. If towel stonk sneezes, or actually hits the mack daddy, it will be free to offer an ATM share offering to raise capital and fix their balance sheet. It doesn't matter what the situation looks like NOW - what matters is shaking the shorts that latch on and bleed the host dry like parasites. Except now the parasites have to deal with both towel stonk AND GameStop moving in lockstep with each other through stock price appreciation.

TLDR:

Expect the next few months to be some of the heaviest FUD months you've ever experienced in your literal life. Expect crazy misdirection. Expect more hostilities towards you as a "meme stonk" holder from everywhere, because the only thing MSM can do is break you down to stop this.

This actually has potential to be the end-game if apes and wasabi are still diamond handing enough towel stonks by the time RegSho force buy hits, because the entire basket will blast off (INCLUDING 55% float DRS'd GME, the mack freaking daddy of shorted stocks).

Why does DRS matter? Because in a situation where FOMO exists, and a stock only has 100m shares (example), 50% DRS means only 50m shares are available for shorting, increasing the probability of RegSho hit and TRUE price discovery, if not only for a small time frame.

GME never ended. Towel stock never ended. Towel stock being on the RegSho threshold list is about to blast both off to Uranus. This is what blows up the death star.
