Maybe this isn't news to you, but it was to me, so I wanted to share it. I thought the only Dividend shares I would get from CS were for those I have DRSD. I thought the rest would be coming from the DTC.

While this is a Trust me Bro moment, it could still be helpful in modifying your questions to our Brokers. I asked if our split was handled as a Forward Split or a Split as a Dividend.

Explanation: I have GME in my ROTH with Edward Jones. (I'm older, so I'm not going to transfer them to Computershare because it would be a foolish waste of money for me.) My agent is excellent there and she not only spoke to the main office to get answer, but also sat on hold for ComputerShare for a half hour to totally understand what was going on. ComputerShare read her a prepared statement that told her the split was BOTH. She was more confused after this conversation and told me she really didn't know how to answer my initial question. She did share with me that her home office stated I received real stocks for my split and they came from ComputerShare and not the DTC. I was honestly only expecting CS to have a match for my DRSD shares. I was expecting the balance to come from the DTC.

I have no idea if this is useful to anyone or not, but it was helpful for me to understand and help me realize I wasn't asking the right question. The better question to break through was 'did Computershare send me the dividend shares they were supposed to.' I could have saved a lot of hassle and time for my wonderful agent.
