Personally, I'm not too optimistic.

When you consider an account with 10,000 of those virtual things that you cant mention retails for $80 online, and a purple ring post can easily net 2000 of them, it makes you wonder how many manipulators will be either photoshopping their images, or just searching for someone elses a few weeks ago and stealing it.

If memory serves me correctly, everyone needs to own 100+ GME shares and have them DRS'd to make a huge dent in the float. Thats a lot of shares when the price has been 100$ upwards for many weeks/months now.

It was 6 million last year and I personally think anything more than 10 million is a little too optimistic.

If nothing else, it'll give a timeline as to how long before the float is locked. Remember, as time goes by and people keep buying, it will naturally slow down. People are chipping away at the float 12 months down the line, whereas a year ago, people were buying big chunks of stock at a time.

Temper your expectations for this week, the main thing is we know DRS is more than October.

Failing that, have a dose of hopium and take into account that I might be wrong and some huge whales have bought tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of shares over the last 6 months and the float is nearly locked.

We'll get there one day, and this week, we find out how long the journey will take.
