An airline has announced that a popular flight is oversold by a factor of 800%. The passengers take a minute to discuss and decide this is ludicrous and will only allow the airline to buyback the tickets at an increased 50,000% increase.

You have a ticket and are offered a whopping 50% increase to buyback the ticket. Legally the airline has to buy back every oversold ticket. Do you sell your ticket back to them at a 50% increase?

Feel free to use this analogy with friends I just thought of it while on adderall. GME
