Idk what's going on over there but it seems like they've lost it. The DRS guide isn't pinned, the top posts are all about some completely irrelevant warehouse fire, and the posts I've seen with pro-DRS sentiment are around 60% upvoted.

There's so much awesome shit happening right now that confirmation bias is telling me this is their endgame push to distract us. They're throwing as many lazy memes and half baked conspiracies at us as they can. They're clearly not focused on quality, they're focused on volume, which leads me to believe the intent is to drown out information, not cause confusion.

I feel like we won't be able to rely on reddit consistently anymore. I secretly hope we won't have to because RC and co. drop a nuke sometime soon, but who knows. Until then, we should plan on good posts being stifled. The erosion of the sub with irrelevant or misleading information has been happening for a while, but the rate has clearly accelerated over the last few weeks.

Either way we need to keep up the pressure on DRS, it's the only thing that works.
