

Title: February 22 and all previous Hype dates

Author: RafaelAzevedoPiano

Created 2022-02-19 23:26:17 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/swmwbs/february_22_and_all_previous_hype_dates/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/swmwbs/february_22_and_all_previous_hype_dates/

Great HODLers of the world,

I hope you are having a chill weekend.

Now, let's gloss over an important topic.

Remember all these hype dates, how every one of them worked out?

...Yeah.

Other than the August and November's rallies, which were short in duration and smaller in scope compared to the previous February and May run-ups, any of the many hype dates fell utterly short, most of them came to a sombering redness of price at the closing hour.

03/19, 04/16, two of the first widely discussed hype/squeeze dates.

The price rose so much!

.....NOT!

Also, August's Moonjam predictions. What a joke that whole thing was.

What these hype dates do achieve is a build-up of psychological weariness from the part of our most gullible apes, who innocently believe they will be retiring shortly after a given hype date.

And when the time comes, these innocent Apes are crushed, having to face the reality of a real war of money, where price is artificially attacked with synthetic shares, absurdly falling at times of amazing news, like the actual NFT Marketplace announcements, or Ryan Cohen's election to the board as chairman.

Tyrant hedgefund managers are attacking the common investor that simply believes a fast growing tech company like GMErica is actually an amazing investment. They will strike on hype dates, even if they lose more money that way.

January 's "sneeze", February's ridiculous "CFO resignation and also ice cream cone" day of almost +200% of "hedging" and "price discovery", if you count the after hours price action that happened on that fateful day.

No real "date hype" at these glorious times. Nobody knew what the f*ck was happening, and it felt even better because we didn't know it would play out the way it did. Did it go up, oh boy it sure did!

A brutal increase in price will arrive, with time and more DRSing, like I also did with my shares.

The walls are closing, and the borrowers will pay back what they owe, as some wise wrinkled apes have been saying since all of this started.

Apes created what is literally the second revisiting of the R. C. Ventures' move into GameStop.

Ryan Cohen bought 9.000.001 shares of GME by December 2020.

Apes have now directly registered some extra 13.000.000 shares since August 2021. Apes are a larger "Insider" than R. C. Ventures, owning more non-shortable shares of GME than any actual Financial Institution. GME holders do not manipulate anything, GME holders simply buy and register shares with their actual money, at their free will, based on careful fundamental and technical analysis. The very opposite of some forms of market manipulation, like naked shorting, for example, that steal money from investors and otherwise valuable companies.

So...

With shorting at 100% utilization, and a larger Whale (Apes) reducing GME's free float to half, ensuring a silent but deadly buying pressure, as Apes are incapable of not HODLing and not buying more,

THERE'S NO NEED FOR HYPE DATES!

...Actual conversation, Chicago, December 2021:

"Mr. K. Griffin, Apes insist on hodling and buying more. The market is falling, and Marge is increasingly worried about you. She will be calling you often, Sir. She told me you look "disgustingly red", her words, and keeps checking with me for hourly reports of your wellbeing."

Keep eating that S&P; ketchup that glows with Melvin style redness, keep mixing it with your usual mayo bowl of recklessness, and Marge will know about it. She WILL call you, Kenny my man. You need to go green, drop that mayo, and these shorts do look terrible on you.

KEEP HODLING!