I'm going around in circles with this. Some people are making some real sense claiming that it's not a dividend, but I have so much other stuff that makes so much sense which would point to gamestop intending this to be an actual dividend. Hear me out and. Ha he my mind.

From the 8937..."On July 5, 2022, the board of directors of GameStop Corp. ("GME") approved a 4:1 stock split to be distributed as a stock dividend (the "Distribution")

There's a recent article regarding Tesla wanting to perform a stock split in the form of a dividend....
"TESLA

The automaker is asking shareholders to approve increasing its common stock to 6,000,000,000 shares in order to enable the stock split: (NOT TO ENABLE A DIVIDEND)

The primary purpose of the Authorized Shares Amendment is to facilitate a 3-for-1 split of our common stock in the form of a stock dividend (the "Stock Split"). "

Notice it says stock split and not distribution. Some say there is no difference, well then, why is the wording different?

Anyway, I may be eating too many crayons since my 64ct became 256... help me understand why GME wrote "distribution".
