

Title: There seems to be something rather obvious that we're all overlooking...

Author: dangshnizzle

Created 2021-09-03 07:38:57 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/ph0hkg/there_seems_to_be_something_rather_obvious_that/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/ph0hkg/there_seems_to_be_something_rather_obvious_that/

The purpose of shorting a lot of these companies into oblivion is not simply to never pay proper taxes on the "profit."

The real purpose is to get around Anti-Trust laws that the USA has had around for ages. This is the 21st Century's method of accomplishing a monopoly without directly breaking competition related laws.

Every single company that has been shorted to nothing has had funds that have gone long on the competitor that becomes the defacto-monopoly by 2016. Literally every one.

Over 90% of these companies have been absorbed into a product/service that Amazon offers. Toys-R-Us? Sears? KMart? Blockbuster? Two dozen other lesser known. JC Penney soon enough

Had Bezos and company outright bought up the competition, they would have quickly been hit with a myriad of anti-trust lawsuits and it would have been very obvious what the plan was. This way however, everything has been indirect. For a bit over a decade, the elite have orchestrated their monopolistic takeover of more markets than we realize.

So what can we do?

We hold onto a majority of our shares, even past the squeeze. This is about more than getting wealth back. This is about change. They need to be stopped, and every last one of us has an obligation to do the moral thing: hold 'til they crumble to oblivion, just like the companies they absorbed. Then, we use the money taken back to change laws.