So there's this fucker Si Sheppard whose a moderator on one of the GME groups on Facebook and he's saying

"Just want to make it clear to those that don't quite understand MOASq.

You're focusing too much on the price of the stock as displayed on the ticker. Sure, the price will go high, but the ticker price will never ever reach the astronomical amounts that you are led to believe.

Now stick with me here before you start foaming at the mouth.

MOASQ is limit sell orders being bought which can be set at astronomical prices. You need to focus on the spread (bid and ask). When shorts need to cover, they will buy at any price. So those shares you've set to sell at $1 Million for example, they will be picked up.

Will the ticker show $1M per share? No as that would destroy the market. Will your limit sell order execute at $1M per share? Very likely during SQ, This is what Mother of all short SQ is, the ticker price can hit $1000 and start a margin call ripple, but the astronomical numbers will be in the limit orders.

Hopefully this makes sense."

What do you guys think about this? I call bullshit and fud but would like your opinion on this.

The problem is a lot of people on that group follow him and take him for his word which worries me
