Hello all.

I am in the UK and have my shares in a trading212 ISA account. They have no option to move shares or drs so I would need to sell and rebuy.

I already did this once when I moved from their basic invest account to their ISA, had to sell and rebuy but at the time it wasn't at a loss or even a gain.

If I sold now however to move elsewhere to drs it would be at a loss and I'm also not in a financial position to buy anymore gme as I know that is a common answer to these types of questions to just buy gme elsewhere going forward.

Realistically for my own personal financial gain, I should be ok without DRSing and just keeping my shares in my T212 ISA?

Sorry if this is a stupid or repetitive post for you but elsewhere it feels like DRS is life and without it the end game will be zero for me

I just need some reassurance, been in this for over a year now like most others and worried if it's gonna end up being for nothing.

Thanks
