So, last night I was able to stealthily listen in on a Twitter voice broadcast/discussion from the popular /r we've all come to despise (the one with +10 million ppl now). As you can imagine, it was concerning GME and other meme stocks.

To TL;DR the whole thing, basically they were using emotional situations to tell people they shouldn't worry about 'holding' or joining any sort of 'movement' (although we all know there's no movement here, we just like the stock) and they were basically trying to tell people to sell sell sell for profit because when you're on your deathbed you won't care if you 'held.' Despicable and manipulative mother fuckers.

This was enough confirmation bias for two things.

1) Hedgies/shorts/MM's STILL desperately need retail to sell, and

2) The aforementioned sub is more occupied than ever.

Thank you for cumming on my Ted talk.
