Preface:

So I was considering what is going to be my next long play/plays after GME inevitably moons and we are all filthy rich ■

Considering how inflation is here to stay. Me as an simple smooth brained ape gravitated towards alternative energy solutions.

I try to keep things simple, it's easier to process due to lack wrinkles, my theory is that the 2000's were simply times were fuel prices were low, thus shorts took a interest in shorting a company working towards cleaner energy such Hydrogen Fuel Cell.

Conclusion: Came across Ticker FCEL (Fuel Cell Energy) simple look at the charts reveal that on October 2nd, 2000 (Possibly shorts covering from the DOT COM bubble) the stock rose to ATH $7421.94. Shows similar pre-sneeze price moment as GME back in January.

But there is literally nothing on this on the internet, but I managed to scrap something quite interesting that might be relatable to GME considering the current hype for a Split/Dividend.

Now my fellow retards it is a coincidence that a 2:1 split was done on 09/14/2000 before the stock the rallying to $7421.94 about 16 days later on Oct 2nd.....I think not ■

Disclosure: I am not a financial advisor, and I consider myself retarded as you can see by the lack revision before posting... Edit title typo: Guess what!
