

Title: Registering Shares In Your Name
Author: TheLunarnautics
Created 2021-07-24 17:43:30 UTC
Permalink: /r/Autisticats/comments/oqumpr/registering_shares_in_your_name/
Url: /r/GMEJungle/comments/oqtrnr/dispelling_the_myths_about_direct_registration/
Is_self: False

Hello fellow Apes! I hope the weekend finds you well. I want to give some key points in order for you to make an independent informed decision about DRS Direct Registration and why it's important and that, NO, you will not miss out on the MOASS if you choose to sell some or all of your shares this way.

1. This is from Computershare who Gamestop has chosen to be their transfer agent and direct stock purchase plan. The link below is the investor center agreement that shows you can do things like Limit Sells of any chosen number of shares on any trading day or GTC. All of this is done online just like a broker but you just don't get the research data etc. You can get that elsewhere easily anyway. <https://cda.computershare.com/Content/7e2c2c4c-aeb6-4614-83a3-b67e32756a78> The massive amount of fud saying it takes forever to sell direct registered stock is just not true and in my mind Bullish as fuck and I can almost guarantee you I'll be fighting shill comments for days and get 0 votes in the end for this post but this information is important. I can buy and sell not only Gamestop DRS share but shares from other well known companies via their investor center online just like a broker website. I invite anyone to create an account with them for free and buy a cheap stock of whatever and then sell it to see for themselves how easy it is.

2. If, as all off the DD has shown, that Gamestop has been so oversold to crazy levels, how are you going to miss out on a MOASS? They have to find basically everyone and convince them to sell their shares. This means retailers are actually also in control of the timeline. For God's sake HF's use Shadow Accounting (essentially two sets of books) so the publicly reported data is way fucked up and delayed.

3. This is where I think DRS Book entry Stock in the actual shareholders name will matter and far more superior then Street Entry with a broker. DRS takes the shares out of the DTC and circulation.

4. People who hold their shares with a broker have them in Street Name which means the shares are actually in the broker's name. This is where I come to one possible way out for the shorts. If a broker goes bankrupt then the shareholder might be stuck with only the SPIC insurance amount of coverage for their shares in addition to trying to fight it in court with expensive lawyers against a army of even more expensive lawyers that could drag out for years.

5. Yes the DTCC has sufficient liquidity but they are also a private company controlled by the very companies that retail is in a battle with so why the fuck would I put my whole faith in them? Or DTC, Cede & Co, and FINRA for that matter?

6. I'm concerned that one or more brokers may be a Red Herring for them to use and go into a bankruptcy for this exact type of situation. This doesn't mean I'm holding everything at Computershare and I actually have shares spread out with many different brokers.

7. This leads to my conclusion that DRS shares will actually be more valuable and in demand during and after the MOASS for the simple fact that they are in Book Entry and in the individual owners name out of the DTC.

8. Your VOTES are counted differently because your shares are held in your name. If enough Apes had done this prior to the last vote we would be drinking Patron on Pluto by now.

All I ask if your a naysayer is to just open a account with Computershare in their investor center and see for yourself. It's free. Give it a test prior to transferring any of your shares. This link is for US and Canadian Apes. I apologize about the rest of the worldwide Apes but they have live chat for anyone to use.

<https://www-us.computershare.com/Investor/#Home>

)

And, of course, make your own personal, individual, educated decision.

Thank you for reading.