I did not have any intention of going and watching it, since I don't know if it could have any new information to provide. That is until my younger brother said that he would be interested in going and watching it to get an idea what has been going on the past year and to also understand why I can't seem to shut up about my favorite stock.

I have been trying to convince him to look at the DD or even ask me questions about the saga, but he refused every time, solely on the opinion that there is no way the professionals in finance could be stupid enough to come this close to crashing the market.

So with his curiosity peaked by a documentary on the GME saga, I am hoping that I can use it as a way to get him and the rest of my family to look into the situation themselves.

Sadly we are in Canada, and I can't seem to find a theater that is showing the documentary. Does anyone know if it is streaming on any platforms, or of a theater that is showing it?
