

Title: Remember when I asked why these constant double-zeroes at close and after hours weren't the most obvious sign of manipulation...

...and that one smug \[person\] in the whole thread tried to catch us and act like I was makin' it up?

Anyway. GME at $125.***00*** AH.

PREVIOUS POST:

**$131.00 - "00." I guess I'll just keep posting this until I get an answer... **

Is it not odd that GME consistently closes on double-zeroes or is "adjusted" to double-zeroes shortly after close (like today, $131.**00**?) Do other stocks do this? When people try to counter that GME isn't being manipulated, how come this isn't front-and-center as an example of manipulation? How come there's not a "double-zeros" guy who posts the "double-zeroes amount" that we close on everyday? Am I CRAZY?!

**AND WHILE WE'RE AT IT:** *GME also appears (to me) to make a considerable amount of double-zero pit stops throughout the day.*
