I see lots of apes getting excited about potential partnerships between our favorite gaming store and our favorite home goods store, speculating that Papa Cohen bought a pile of BBBY to bring the two companies together.

Here's the thing, honeybunches, RC Ventures is not GameStop Incorporated. Ryan Cohen owns stock in both companies, but the neither company has any stake in the other.

Furthermore, it's nearly certain that GameStop is not going to partner with BBBY. If they were to partner, and that partnership would make heaps of money, as lots of apes are speculating, then it would be insider trading for RC to buy BBBY before that partnership is made public.

I'm not a lawyer, but I used to work at a publicly traded company, and my employer made us all learn how to avoid insider trading. A text book example of insider trading in my employer's training is when you know of an upcoming partnership and buy stock in the partner company before the partnership is announced.

Am I jacked to the tits and excited to see what RC's plan is? Fuck yeah. Will it be a partnership between GME and BBBY? No way.
