The prevalence of male leaders tied to the meme stock craze likely would not surprise Sallie Krawcheck, the co-founder and CEO of a trading platform for women called Ellevest.

In a new interview, Krawcheck described the trading phenomenon as "pretty bro-ey," saying men download trading apps in higher numbers than women, in part because women enjoy less leisure time as they take responsibility for a larger share of the tasks at home.

"It's pretty bro-ey," Krawcheck said of the meme stock phenomenon. "It doesn't mean that there aren't women who were doing it, and we saw some sort of wash in and wash out of Ellevest last year because of it."
