I get it. Options can be a tool to fight the hedgies with, but stop pushing options on people who have never traded options.

The argument for pushing options is always "it's just for people who know what they are doing and not for new investors".

Guess what?

The new investors are the only people you are influencing towards playing with options. Experienced investors would've already bought options if they felt it was a good idea. There is no reason to shove options down people's throats.

BUY, HOLD, DRS. It's so fucking simple.

Don't throw away your money on options if you're not experienced.

Everything here is my opinion. There is no financial advice to be found here.
