So I talked with the Fid Trader desk guy for about 26 minutes about my GME shares. He said fid did get shares from the DTCC not the DTC but that he was not able to share any documents with me because that would take approvals that happen m-f.

I was asking where my shares came from and can I Trust but Verify what he told me.

He said I had a valid concern over all this, just that he doesn't have the tools to help me. I asked who does, he said gamestop investor relations if they choose to act and if enough people contact. I said they've already spoken. They said to call your broker if you're concerned. That's exactly what I was doing. I just need fid to release the instructions from the DTCC.

1. Why did it come from DTCC and not rhe DTC like GameStop mentioned?

2. Can I verify that's the instruction fid was given?

The guy seemed knowledgeable. He understood my concern of non issued shares in the market if any broker did just split shares. But from his data, fid did get shares from what DTCC.

Fid and all brokers need to release the instruction provided by the DTCC to see if the same instruction was given to all brokers. Who is messing this up? Brokers or DTCC?
