

Title: Bridgewater Associates

Author: disoriented_llama

Created 2021-07-21 22:45:01 UTC

Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/op0y6f/bridgewater_associates/

Url: /r/finance/comments/35mjgo/bridgewater_associates/

Is_self: False

Hi

has anyone here interviewed/worked at Bridgewater? I'm having my second round interview tomorrow for a Finance Associate position. I really, really like the way they come off regarding their culture and transparency but would love feedback from anyone who's dealt with them beyond interviews.

EDIT:

Just finished with the HR Finance Lead. Interview went pretty well, asked about culture / transparency, very detailed in-depth questions on modeling and excel usage, how I consider myself a good fit, etc, etc.

She's sending my recruiter a "test" for me to complete and will decide for round 3 depending on the results.

I asked her for feedback on my interview (since they're so transparent) and she actually gave me her thoughts on how she viewed me as a candidate, which I found pretty different/helpful.
thanks for all the feedback on this, it was all helpful. I'm not worried about round 3, the test should be fine and the recruiter said the fact she's sending the test is a good sign.