Maybe I'm late to the party, but I realized today that if a 7-1 split is indeed that magic number that GME decides to go with, that 60 shares will become 420 shares. Now if that's not bullish I don't know what is. Additionally, for those interested and in a budget, you would need 9.857 shares for your post split amount to be 69 shares. This is obviously bullish and likely to trigger the the big squeeze. I had to form a wrinkle to do this math for you apes, so I hope you all enjoy.
