Is_self: False

Below is a fascinating (but long) transcript I typed from an interview between attorney Daniel Sheehan, who represents Lue Elizondo, and host Regina Meredith, describing the powerful entity above the government pulling the strings and keeping everything a secret. If you're into geeking out on this stuff like me, it's worth the read.

Regina \[Host\]: Why are we saying we don't know anything about this when people certainly at certain levels of the military industrial complex do have an idea of what this is? Because they've been looking into it, they've housed pieces of it, if not full craft, for decades.

Sheehan: Well, now, we have to exercise some care here. Because \[of the\] use of the term 'we', what we know or what they did, that one of the things that we discovered is that inside the Defense Department there is still this fluid situation where they haven't really determined what to do about all this anymore.

Regina: Okay, and I can see the sensitivity there.

Sheehan: They had a very clear idea about it. We're going to keep it totally secret. We're going to lie about it. We're going to destroy anybody who tries to report it. The first thing we do if any kind of a major official inside the military wants to make a report of a UFO--

Regina: Discredit them, take them down.

Sheehan: We'll discredit, send them to get a psychiatric study, all this stuff. So there have been some, it's not clear whether they had succeeded in coming up with any kind of a new protocol for what to do about this once 2007, once this study was being undertaken. It's perfectly clear that there were elements inside the National Security State infrastructure that were blocking Lue's study. So the bottom line is there are clearly elements inside the defense industry and inside the National Security State bureaucracy that are highly reactionary, are extremely possessive of the information that they've got, are still dedicated to trying to develop this into some sort of a weapon system to give us massive superiority so we can establish full spectrum dominance over the whole planet. And are hoping that eventually someday they will be able to get a line of funding going to the Defense Department to protect our whole planet against an extraterrestrial civilization. There's an element inside the defense industry and the National Security State that are into that. Now, above that group, above that group is some other group that gets this information.

Regina: Let's talk-- Danny, you talk about this and the word fascism comes up, as it should. People don't understand what the word fascism means. They don't understand the degree to which we're already in lockstep with it, and don't know it. And I would like you to go back historically, and then at the end of our conversation and we'll get to the day. What is it, June 25th this year where the report came out--

Sheehan: Yea

Regina: --and underwhelmed everybody, and why that was. But let's take a few minutes to talk about who these other others are.

Sheehan: Yea. Well, the reality is that our whole human family has almost always, since the dawn of our species, had certain alpha men and women who assert a kind of leadership, if not dominion, over the rest of the community. And sometimes for better, sometimes for worse, they have this kind of authoritative position inside the communities and some of them use it wisely, or used it wisely as authoritative leaders instead of authoritarian leaders. Others distorted it and became authoritarian and that's gone on all throughout history. In our particular country, we are quite proud of the fact that we threw off the tyranny of this elite, the royalist class of people. And those of us, those are the people who came to the colonies and ignored the fact that there were millions of Native Indigenous people here and just said oh, we found this and got the institution of the church, the Catholic church, through the doctrine of discovery to authorize them to claim the territory despite there were all these other people here, okay.

So there was an elite European white culture dominated by the men who asserted control over all of these resources, et cetera. So we know right from the very beginning in our country there was this elitist, racist minority that asserted the right to dominate the vast majority of people on the continent. And what happened is the governing structures that they set up carried into continuation some of the elements of the royalist class in Europe, where they had this elite group of people that were white male landowners, large landowners, who ended up being in the Senate. And then there was this House of Representatives that didn't really represent the people at all. Women weren't represented. Non-white people weren't represented.

Regina: Landowner white men were able to vote.

Sheehan: That's right. Okay, and they were all represented by Alexander Hamilton and the Hamiltonians. There was this whole element that were like Tories, as they referred to them, that were kind of elitists. And Alexander Hamilton despite the goodwill he's been generated by the Broadway play or musical, was in fact, the lawyer of these mercantilists and these merchant class people, the financial minority. And they wanted to have a new government much stronger than the Articles of Confederation, which was just a confederation or like a coalition of the 13 colonies. And the sovereignty resided in the colonies themselves all the way from 1776 to 1781, that whole thing went on until you had the Articles of Confederation. But it was the mercantile class that wanted to have a much stronger centralized government, primarily for the purposes of benefiting their commercial activities. They wanted common weights and measures. They wanted common currencies. They wanted common rules of trade to take place, and that was a lot of the impetus for the creation of the federal government on their part. And they were part of the Federalists that wrote the Federalist Papers, and that was Alexander Hamilton in those.

And then there was this other element that was led by Madison, James Madison. They're known as the Jeffersonians because he was more well-known, but the fact is that Jefferson and Madison and Aaron Burr and those other people were more into trying to maintain a limited government, a limited central government that didn't have these kind of plenipotentiary powers of any kind. And so there was a tension right at the very beginning of our government. And that went on from 1789, when they crafted the original three articles to set up the legislature, the executive branch, and the judicial branch. And then 1791, when the Madisonians rose and got the Bill of Rights put in, which is infused with the natural law principles that were taught to many of them by John Witherspoon at the College of New Jersey, actually. It became Princeton University that there were 39 of the original Congress people were all taught by this one man. And they were steeped in natural law traditions different from Alexander Hamilton. And it included not only James Madison and Aaron Burr, who you remember, Aaron Burr is the one that killed Alexander Hamilton.

Regina: Killed, yes.

Sheehan: It was the tension between these two elements was so intense, okay. So this element has been there since the beginning, this elitist group of people. When the American Civil War took place, at the end of the American Civil War the elitists won the war. And they were into a stronger centralized government that would serve the interests of the major mercantilists and the industrialists, et cetera. They suppressed the agrarian people in the south. What happened is from 1868 at the end of the American Civil War to 1898, just a 30 year period, I mean a period that just goes back to when Reagan was president.

Regina: Right

Sheehan: Right, in that 30 year period there arose like 25 to 30 families led by major hard-charging alpha males that monopolized various aspects of our economy. Took over the agricultural industry, took over the shipping lanes, took over the railroads, took over the production of steel and metal, pharmaceuticals, they rose into monopolizing these portions of our society.

Regina: Banking, of course.

Sheehan: And banking. And so all of that took place in a 30 year period, came to it's full fruition with McKinley in 1898 with Mark Hanna, who was his kind of promoter. What they did is they basically took over the instrumentalities of the federal government. And they put them all at the disposal of the interests of this new entity, this new business entity called the corporation. The corporations didn't exist like this until 1872, into this process. What they did is these mercantilists that owned these big monopoly interests in areas of the economy devised this new instrument by means of which you could own shares of a company and be completely immunized against any liability for whatever the company did. And so then you would task people you hired to run your corporation to just simply maximize the profits in any way that they possibly could. And they too were immunized personally of any liability for whatever wrongdoing they did. And only the assets of the corporation were subject to common law lawsuits. So what you had done is you created this sinful structure, right in 1872 that was the vehicle of the elite that actually figured out how to control the resources of the country. What they did is they took over all the instrumentalities of the government. They started bribing the United States senators and congressmen, paying for their elections, et cetera. And they've continued that kind of control--

Regina: Today.

Sheehan: They continued that kind of control. They came to a kind of full manifestation in a private investor group of these 30 families that each held a chair in a group called Brown Brothers Harriman. And the Brown Brothers Harriman was a private investment group. That had a staff, the CEO of which was George Herbert Walker. And that sounds familiar to you because he was the grandfather of George Herbert Walker Bush, and he was the CEO of that operation. The lawyer was Allen Dulles, okay. The law firm that represented him was Sullivan and Cromwell. And this alliance between Sullivan and Cromwell, this major law firm, Cromwell being the guy who took over Panama so they could build the Panama Canal, again, for the merchants.

Regina: Right

Sheehan: Okay, this whole group basically seized complete control virtually over our government. And so they ended up drafting The Versailles Treaty. They ended up creating the Union Bank of New York, which financed the rise of the fascists in Germany. And it came into it, that was the first time that this fascist-- fascism, there's a major treatise that was written by Benito Mussolini on this-- that fascism is a theory of economic development.

Regina: Right, and this is what I want you to explain.

Sheehan: People don't understand this. It's not what we think. We've been subjected to the propaganda from World War II that all the fascists are these goosetepping Nazis with the monocle and saber scar, and six league boots with the riding crop and all that. And these are the Nazis, they're all characterized in movies, etc cetera. But the bottom line is, fascism is an economic theory pursuant to which the owners of industry and the major corporations get control of the instrumentalities of the government. And therefore, the instrumentalities of the government are put at the disposal of the interests of the major corporations. The short of it is, what's good for General Motors is good for the country.

Regina: Well, John Perkins, I don't know if he's the one that coined the term corporatocracy, but that is exactly what fascism is.

Sheehan: That's exactly what it is. And that's what had taken control of the United States government. Now, this went on all the way through World War I. When World War I broke out in Europe and the United States came in and became part of this thing, up until 1917. Then in 1918, there as the Versailles Treaty that was signed. People don't know this, but the Versailles Treaty, the Versailles Treaty was supervised by a fellow by the name of Robert Lansing. Robert Lansing was the Secretary of State under Wilson. Robert Lansing was the son-in-law of John W Foster. John W Foster was the grandfather of John Foster Dulles and Allen Dulles. This linkage is extremely powerful, because Robert Lansing, who is the Secretary of State for the United States under Wilson at the end of World War I, brought in his two nephews, John Foster Dulles and Allen Dulles, to sit with him in the negotiations of the Versailles Treaty. And they drafted into the treaty the reparations requirements that they imposed on Germany. And what happened, very importantly, those reparations were imposed upon Germany and Allen Dulles, who was the drafter, along with his brother John Foster Dulles, of these provisions was made the lawyer for Germany by the American Secretary of State at the end of the war. He was also the attorney for Brown Brothers Harriman. So what they did is they organized a series of loans from the individual wealthy families that were members of Brown Brothers Harriman to give loans to Germany to pay the reparations to pay to corporations that had been injured during World War I and then they took stock in those companies in Germany. What they did, very importantly, the CEO of Brown Brothers Harriman, who was George Herbert Walker, stepped out in 1924 as the CEO and turned it over to his son-in-law, who was Prescott Bush. Prescott Bush became the CEO for Brown Brothers Harriman. George Herbert Walker formed the Union Bank of New York, capitalized by the financiers in the Brown Brothers Harriman, and set up a subsidiary in Germany known as the Bank of Shipping and Commerce with this guy Thyssen that ran it, and they started giving loans to Germany and to the Nazi movement. They financed the construction of the international headquarters of the Nazi party, that bank system did. And they wanted to set them up as the bulwark against Bolshevism. Because what had happened is, right at the end of War--

Regina: They prefer fascism.

Sheehan: That's right. Because at the end of World War I, the people in Russia rose up and threw out the czar, who had joined in World War I and depleted the resources of Russia. So they threw the czar out and set up a People's Socialist Republic there. And Robert Lansing immediately sent a US military expeditionary force into Russia to try to crush the Bolsheviks, which 99.9% of anybody listening doesn't even know about. They sent in a whole foreign military expeditionary force to try to crush the Russian Revolution in the cradle. And that's what started the hostility towards the West, okay. So that thing has been going on since 1917, October. There's been this effort on the part of the elite, who are represented by the Brown Brothers Harriman and Sullivan and Cromwell, the Union Bank of New York, and that whole element to crush the Social Democratic movement around the world.

What I'm saying is that what happened is this began right after the Treaty of Versailles, they were setting up this fascist set of governments in Germany to be the bulwark against Bolshevism as they called it in Europe, has wedded this elite to the whole economic theory of fascism. So fascist capitalism is a lot different than just free trade. It's a lot different than just entrepreneurial spirit or free business. I mean, everybody has a right if they engage in bringing some people together and setting up a business and making shoes or making cars or whatever they want to do, as long as they're willing to accept responsibility for anybody they damage.

Regina: Yeah, but not rigging the entire game in your favor without our knowledge.

Sheehan: And that's what happened. And so what we're saying here is that element has been here since the beginning and so what happened is that, for example, immediately at the end of World War II, for example, when the G2, the head of US Army and Intelligence in the Philippines, Edward Landsdale, discovered the Japanese had buried billions--trillions, actually, dollars worth of gold and platinum and silver and stuff all through the Philippines, they uncovered a bunch of it and they told Truman about this. Rather than turn this over back to the people who Japan had stolen it from all through Asia from 1926 to 1940, that whole thing, what they did is they took the gold 12 troughs of it, which totaled $1.2 trillion, and put it into a private trust. They got two partners from Brown Brothers Harriman to become the trustees for this. And then they--

Regina: Did that go into black ops projects from that point?

Sheehan: Well, the first thing they did is start funding fascists around the world to defeat the partisans. The partisans that had fought in World War II in all the different European countries against the fascists, the elitists in the United States didn't want them to be elected to be mayors or governors or anything else. They wanted those people out, because most of them had become social Democrats. But what they wanted to do is they wanted to suppress them. And they brought Nazis, fascists, they financed them, got them new identities, new names and everything, and got them elected, financed their elections by issuing gold certificates based upon this trove of treasure that they had. So this elite operation has been going on and that represents the model. Now that's 1945, that was December 1945. In July of 1947, less than two years later, when they discovered this crashed saucer in Roswell, what they did was they brought it to

Wright Field, which was a US government installation. But what they did after is they established this other elite group very similar to what they call the Anderson Trust. Two of the trustees for that were Robert Anderson and Robert Lovett, both of whom were senior partners at Brown Brothers Harriman. And then John Jay McCloy was the third guy that became the head of the new government of the United States in Germany.

Regina: What did this elite group do in response to the crash?

Sheehan: Well, this is interesting. So what they've done, obviously, is they've taken custody of this technology and they've brought in major corporations, Lockheed Martin, Boeing, others, and swore them to complete secrecy. And they've started making technology available to them to try to figure out how to back engineer this stuff. They set up these programs, skunkworks, S4 at Area 51, Ben Rich and all these people that ran that operation. What they've been doing is trying to monopolize this new technology and monopolize all the information about who the occupants are and where they come from and what they're up to, et cetera. We don't know yet the degree to which they've had any kind of diplomatic relations with them. We have different people who have testified. I've interviewed people who profess quite credibly to have actually been present when an ET was being interviewed, and that they have little notes and stuff from the interview, talking about what they were doing, what their purpose was and all of that. And so I've seen a lot of that. And because I know all about that stuff that's one of the reasons that Lue Elizondo reached out to me to have me represent him because he was really upset about the fact that the Defense Department was continuing to lie about this. Continue to lie, say they didn't have any secret programs.

Regina: So each level is serving their master?

Sheehan: Well, it's interesting. The topography of this particular issue is still to be resolved, but I'm on the job now. This is what I did with the Pentagon Papers stuff. This is what I did with the Karen Silkwood case. This is how we stopped the construction of all private nuclear power plants in the United States. This is how we did the Iran-Contra case to drill down and find out about Oliver North and the whole operation.

Regina: You've got all the boring stuff.

Sheehan: So what I'm trying to do now is I'm trying to bring together everyone who has an interest in knowing what's really going on with the UFOs. Everybody who has a legitimate interest in knowing who the occupants are, everybody who has a legitimate interest in knowing what their agenda is, what they're up to here. Why is it they're not telling us about themselves? That's a bit suspicious, so what's really going on? What we have is a community, the so-called UFO community.

Regina: That is not a community.

Sheehan: Well, it's a--

Regina: It is so shattered. So much in-fighting.

Sheehan: But the reality--they're all interested in the same issues. And aside from the turfing and ego problems that exist in almost any organization of human beings. The reality is that we have been devoted for 75 years into trying to convince people that UFOs were real, and convince people that they're extraterrestrial. We're right on the brink of being able to get that confirmed by what average people have been trained to understand are authoritative sources. One of which is the Defense Department, one of which is the New York Times. Another is 60 Minutes and CBS. And so what we're in the process of doing now is trying to get more and more authoritative sources to come in behind Lue Elizondo and Chris Mellon and the others, who are trying to say, look, the time has come to get our people of our planet educated about this. And we also have the Catholic church. Strangely enough, the Vatican has issued an official public statement saying that in light of the discovery of more and more of these new exoplanets, the time has now arrived much sooner than had been previously anticipated when we are going to discover the existence of life elsewhere in the universe. Now that was a statement issued on November 11th of 2009, some time ago, by Dr. Jose Gabriel Funes, who was the director of the observatory, the Pontifical Observatory. I, because of my previous incarnation as the legal counsel of the Jesuit Headquarters in the Social Ministry office, I reached out to him and within 24 hours I was sitting with him face to face. Within the first two minutes, he confirmed to me that well, we're not talking about just discovering single cell life underneath some frozen lake on some distant moon somewhere. We're talking about another highly intelligent, highly technologically developed, but distinctly non-human species.

Regina: Yes

Sheehan: Right here in our galaxy, okay. Now that is profound. So we have now these various institutions, all of what you see though is both the Defense Department and the Catholic church are trying to ignore the entire history of direct contact. And all the institutions are trying to keep that away right now, which means that there is some combined will to conceal whatever it is that's known about the agenda of the extraterrestrial civilization. Because as I've said before, they could come and just talk to us and tell us what they're here for, but they aren't. In my judgement, we need to be more circumspect than many of the people who've been laboring in the vineyard for 75 years, those of us who are still alive at that age, who have been saying oh look, let's find out about the UFOs. Let's prove that they're extraterrestrial, and let's all just assume they're okay. Let's all assume they're going to be helpful. Let's all assume they're going to be friendly. And I have every hope in the world of that being true. I can absolutely guarantee that. But what I'm saying is that we don't know yet.

Regina: But most the people involved, when you speak with them privately, will say no, I'm not assuming these people are a threat. We just want to know what's going on. When you speak to others who study more from an ancient historical perspective and indigenous perspective, they've always been here. They've always been a part of the culture. They've helped cultures through difficult times.

Sheehan: Yeah--

Regina: So to presume that they're dangerous, that's the bad. That would be a bad thing.

Sheehan: That's a bad thing. That's a bad thing, and that's a function of a reactionary world view. That's being trapped in the second chakra. And there's all kinds of members of our human family who are at differing levels of conscious evolution. In that they all react to the phenomenon from the particular chakra that they're rooted in. And so what we have to do is we have to address our people ourselves to try to get some sort of a common collective process underway. And that's what the Catholic church said in 2009. Because of this, he said, the time has now arrived to begin a very serious conversation among the citizens of our planet to ascertain the answers to the profound philosophical and theological questions that are posed to us now with the discovery that we are not only not in the center of the physical universe, we are no longer at the apex of a pyramid of conscious life in the universe. The universe does not exist as a stage upon which to play out the drama of the evolution of one single species in the universe, from primordial life up into starfury. That's not what the universe is about. And so we have to go through this process of diminished sense of our importance in the universe. And this is a social psychological process. We have to come to grips with the people who are afraid of anything new or different, who attempt to lash out with violence.
