I know a lot of people are craving instant gains and to see a big run up but I can't stop thinking about how much more this means than just money. For a long time now, many companies have been attacked by naked short selling. This in its self is a conflict of morality. I see this as one final stand to expose the system for what it actually is, a rigged game to benefit the greedy.

I know people that are bitter will say shorts help with price discovery, help expose crime, or whatever have you. Naked short selling is illegal in most countries for a reason and I'm surprised the US, the "land of opportunity" still allows this practice. Yea of course I would like to see some gains out of this play but I keep thinking about the thousands of people that have lost jobs because of companies going under due to abusive naked shorting.

This is why I trust in my investment, my morals tell me that Ryan Cohen is the real deal, a guy who isn't bought for. This is hard to find nowadays within the 1%. A man who models himself after his working class father, is a man of great character.

I am sure some people might be discouraged about the earnings call not housing any major news such as a dividend but I trust that RC has a plan for Gamestop and is invested in leaving a stamp of change that will impact our country for generations to come. Im ■ up to see this through to the end! Regardless of people saying it's a "bad" investment. I want to be on the right side of history. ■
