Selling through Computershare reintroduces some degree of market volatility and broker risk, in addition to potential limits on per-share and total order price. My understanding is that it is perfectly legal, however cumbersome, to sell publicly traded securities directly. I wonder if this might be a viable option for apes looking to diamond hand their GME shares until hedgies or prime brokers literally come begging for them.

Is anyone familiar with any legal obstacle to this strategy?

Is there a secure protocol for ensuring payment is received? Model contracts to use?
